

Maxwell Installation Commander's SAFETY MESSAGE

“SAFETY is a way of life”

Integrating safety and occupational health into all operations is paramount to the success of the missions across Maxwell AFB. Therefore, safety and occupational health programs must receive the highest priority of effort in order to preserve our most precious resource, our personnel, and to build safe operating procedures into every level of activity across the base. All of our personnel have the right to expect a safe and healthy working environment with robust Air Force occupational safety and health programs in place.

Commanders and supervisors at all levels must lead the charge to develop, implement and manage effective mishap prevention programs, maintain safe and healthy working environments within their respective organizations, as well as identify and recognize individuals for exceptional contributions toward those goals. All personnel are expected to support and comply with the mishap prevention program and safe work practices, while incorporating risk management principles into all of the actions they take to protect themselves, their Wingmen and their families, both on and off duty. Accomplishing the mission is our primary objective, but it must be done at a pace which allows us to take the time to perform each step safely. Every Airman's attention is needed to ensure the Air Force delivers a safe, efficient and effective work environment.

Every member of Team Maxwell has the right and responsibility to stop any unsafe act before it happens and to help institute reasonable risk management measures to prevent future acts. I challenge our personnel at every level to bring forward ideas, suggestions and solutions as to how Maxwell can deliver the safest operating environment in the Air Force.

ERIC K. SHAF A
Colonel, USAF
Commander